On stage is seen a small dog kennel on wheels. The kennel is spun around to show all sides.

There is a small bone house on the back. The front door is flipped open to show the audience a completely empty interior.

The magician now brings out a small dog and opens the front door again is places the dog inside the kennel and locks the door.

He now spins the kennel to show the bone store at the rear from which he removes a bone and then dismantles showing that that too is now empty.

The kennel is once again spun to the front. The magician now whistles and knocks on the front door with the bone.

Suddenly the roof bursts open and your assistant dressed in a skimpy dog costume is seen standing in the kennel who seems too large to have been hiding in there.

This is an amazing piece of transformation magic and one that packs down extremely small, with only a few pin hinges.
