Basically homeschooling is parent directed education. This can occur in the kitchen of a home. It can also take place at other locations in a home, for example a spare room, the garage, the basement, or the back porch. A number of parents find ways to teach their children outside of the home, for example in taking lessons, or going to the library, or going on field trips. In short parents assume full responsibility for educating their children. The parents may choose to involve others to help with the education, but the parents are still in charge.

There is a huge variety of reasons why parents may choose not to send their children off to public schools. A majority of homeschoolers have one or more of the following three basic reasons: 1) School environment 2) Religious or Moral 3) Academics.

There are also many, many more reasons. Some homeschool so their child can be in the movies. Some homeschool because it is hard to get rid of bad public school teachers. Others homeschool because of the father's work schedule. Some parents even homeschool to avoid assignments like researching internet porn. There are almost as many reasons as families.

This book will tell you the basics and will help you to make an informed decision in order to know whether homeschooling is right for your family or not.
