Eighteen-year-old Corey Arner is sentenced to visit a prison inmate as part of his probation for a pot bust. His grandfather, the former public defender for Lehigh Valley, Pennsylvania, asks the judge if he would let Corey visit an old client of his, a man who has been in prison for over fifty years. The judge agrees. Corey isn't thrilled about visiting the inmate until the old man, Harold Bender, tells him to find his old girlfriend, and supposed victim, Brenda Stern. Corey's grandfather, Jonah, has always believed Harold was innocent. He and Corey begin to investigate the old crime and learn that Harold may have been railroaded by the old police chief who arrested him – Barney Stern, the victim's father. Brenda disappeared leaving nothing behind but a pink scarf with traces of blood. Barney and the prosecutor, dapper Hamilton Morton, build a case on circumstantial evidence, ensuring that Harold will be found guilty. Young Jonah doesn't stand a chance. He loses the case and Harold is sentenced to life. Now, fifty-seven years later, Jonah wants to do all he can to prove Harold innocent. Meanwhile, a six-car pileup on the Pennsylvania Turnpike takes the life of Gary Bronson, an old friend of Harold's. After Gary relocated to Alaska, he returned to Pennsylvania every year to visit his old friend, Harry. This time, as Gary is driving home to Alaska, his car collides with a semi and bursts into flames, killing him. When the state police investigate the accident, they find something they weren't looking for – a body in Gary's trunk. What really happened to Brenda Stern? Circumstantial Evidence is a taut mystery thriller that asks the question, What really happened to Brenda Stern?
