ADDICTED TO YOU: A Billionaire Romance (Part Three) Glenna Sinclair

“Smile, Meagan.”

He didn't like repeating himself. When I didn't listen, or do as he said, or was too far gone in that faraway place to understand what he was saying, his voice changed a little — just a little bit — to remind me just what was at stake if I refused him.

I had to do what he said. I had to do everything he said. If I didn't, my mother would die. He'd already proven he could make her sick just by mixing up her medications. She trusted him completely, didn't suspect him at all.

He had everyone fooled. Everyone except me. He'd revealed the monster that wore his skin to me because I had something he wanted.

He wanted all of me.

“Meagan.”

I smiled as best I could, the corners of my mouth yanking upward, unnatural, but a smile by definition.

WARNING:

DARK ROMANCE.

This serial deals with themes of sexual abuse and addiction.
