Pru has always wanted a family and is pleased to discover a distant cousin. Unfortunately, she no sooner meet him than he dies, an apparent suicide. The evidence, however, points to murder, and when Pru points this out, she is roundly dismissed.

When Knighton receives a letter from Pru asking for his help, he is happy to oblige. He has missed her attractive and intelligent company more than he expected. However, he soon finds that his inquiry may be as useless as Pru's when they are blocked at every turn by other members of the family who prefer a ruling of suicide to an investigation into their secrets.

Pru and Knighton are unwilling to let the murderer get away with his crime, however, regardless of the danger to them and the growing love they share.
